These preliminary remarks for another RCE are provided to accompany the submission of three Japanese language documents, one of which has English language equivalents. These documents were cited in the prosecution of the corresponding Japanese application. Translations of the two Japanese publications for which no English language equivalents are provided will be submitted as soon as translations can be arranged.

Reference should first be made to the allowing papers and the reasons for allowance of the pending claims. While it is believed that none of these documents is more relevant to the pending claims than documents already of record prompting those reasons for allowance, caution dictates that still another RCE and this submission be made.

Publication JP06-303559 and Publication JP343147 are said to disclose a video printer having a video signal from a video camera, where the video printer outputs the video signal to a display device. The video printer controls the video camera to stop and regenerate the picture which is captured by the video camera. Neither of these publications discloses a "camera station for attaching a cameral to the printer housing portion". Neither discloses that the printer controls the video camera to select a picture for display. Each only separately controls a display device for display, and the video camera for selecting a picture.

As to Publication JP04-336889, English language equivalents are found in the cited English language publications. As seen, an index signal is marked to a desired picture for printing. A printer can automatically print the marked picture.

Consideration of these newly-cited references relative to the reasons for allowance and the pending, allowed claims is respectfully solicited, so that this application can again be promptly passed to issue.
